substance. Curious to know what it was, he carried it to his home, and, breaking off a chunk brought it to City Chemist George B. Bolling. Mr. Bolling subjected it to a number of tests, and under treatment of hot alcohol it yielded all the properties of ambergris, which is used in the finer grades of perfume. Mr. Bolling said to-day that at the standard rate for ambergris of $60 an ounce it was worth $12,200.

White was overjoyed, and, rather than wait for an electric car, hired an automobile and drove fifty miles to his cottage and brought the chunk of ambergris back with him. He is treating the incensed chunk with the greatest deference, and will have it closely guarded.

Chemist Bolling says the ambergris was probably coughed up by a sick whale.

New York, January 3.—Four generations of one of New York's oldest families and an estate valued at $10,000,000 estimated at from $1,250,000 to $19,000,000 are involved in a lawsuit, the facts in which have come to light through a document handed down by the State Supreme Court here.

The defendants in the action are the Misses Furniss, three wealthy women who are holding in trust the estate of their father, William Furniss, a West Indian merchant. They have multiplied in value many times over by shrewd investment in New York "real estate."

The present action is brought by the ultimate heirs of the trust fund, all distant relatives, who demand a definite accounting from the three trustees. In their answer the sisters Furniss say that it would cost a large sum of money to make an accounting for the last forty years, and that the plaintiffs are not entitled to it.

The Misses Furniss are all in excellent health, despite their years. The oldest of the sisters is eighty-five.
